

Earl's Diary - Thursday - February 2,2012

We were able to take off right on time this morning. (By we, I mean The Peanut and I). At 9:15 we pulled out of the gate at Heritage Park - AND the trip was underway! The new 8 cylinder Chevy hardly knew the 3500 lb. Peanut was following us.

Traffic was very heavy ALL the way down Highway 99. And, I do mean ALL the way down. It was hard to leave the cruise control on due to slow trucks, or entering on the highway vehicles. Other than the traffic, the trip was uneventful. I traveled 260 miles today.

I did stop a couple times, and once for lunch. I arrived here at the Orange Grove Rv Park at 4:00. It didn't take long to set up and I was able to get a short snooze in before fixing dinner. This is a very large park and I don't think reservations are needed (at least in the winter time). I estimate the park is only half full tonight

I'm saving a thousand words and showing a couple of photographs of The Peanut parked among the orange trees.

This park was carved out of an orange grove and the spacious sites still sit among some of the trees. (In fact, the park is still surrounded on three sides by an orange grove.) Residents are even encouraged to pick and take the fruit.

Tomorrow will be a long driving day also. Tomorrow night's stop will be in Needles. I notice on the map that's 273 miles! It's off to bed now. I will write more later. Bye - - Earl
