

Earl's Diary - Sunday - February 9, 2014

This is the final day of the gathering. Already lots of people have left the area. By tomorrow morning almost all the eggs will be gone.

We were all so busy the rest of the day. This relaxing can be so taxing! Alan and I went to McD for supper tonight and for internet access. Following our salads we went next door for our DQ fix. With eager anticipation and spritely steps we entered the Pilot RV Truck Stop (where DQ is located) looking forward to our delicious treats! To my dismay, a sign on the counter said, "This lane is closed". With complete dismay, I questioned one of the other clerks about the situation. The response was that the facility had a water main break and it wasn't fixed yet. Oh boo hoo, what a let down! We were completely perplexed and decided to go back to McD's for a hot fudge sunday. That was NOT nearly as neat as the DQ!

I gathered the Scamp Owners International folks help take the Ladderball racks apart.

Compact II

Some unusual eggs

13' Scamp with custom paint job

?? Boler

13' Casita

SOI owners heading for home in their Escape egg trailer

Well, dear Loyal Readers wherever you may be, so ends the Quartzsite part of my trip. Tomorrow The Peanut will be hitched up and towed to the next stop on my itinerary - Anza/Borrego State Park, California. I will be spending 4 nights there and certainly hope I will find some interesting things to report. I'm not sure where the next WiFi spot will be so you will receive a report when a spot is found. Thanks for once again coming along with me on this part of my trip. Bye for now - Earl